Coming from a small Missouri town, music was just something you heard on the radio, not something you dedicated a life to. Growing up in the country, Travis Feutz saw first hand what the genre of country music was all about. Witnessing hard work, struggle, pain, love, loss, family, and faith all helped shape him into the artist he is today. Travis is doing his damndest to keep the tradition of country music alive. Like his heroes that have come before him, Travis seeks honesty and sincerity in his music. His songs are like stories being passed down from one generation to another. His voice and style is raw and unique, but you'll swear you've heard him before in some smokey honky tonk on a Saturday night.

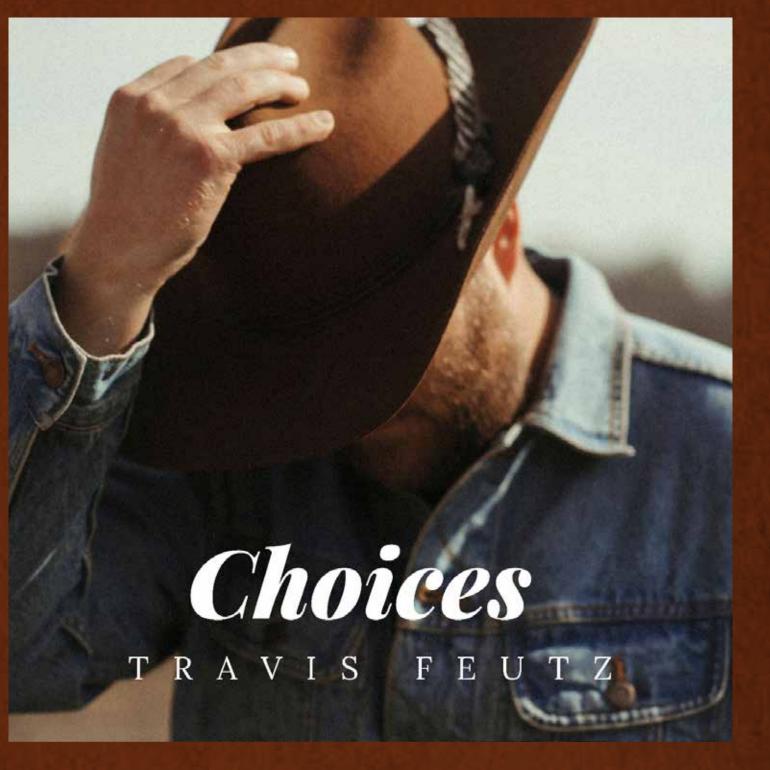

It has been a long hard road to get to this point. A wise musician once told Travis "you didn't pick this life, it picked you." He thinks on those words often. Travis doesn't care for fame and fortune. At the end of the day it all comes down to the song. Always searching for that feeling a song gives when you have to play it over and over again while driving on some country road. A song that connects on such a level that it penetrates the soul. That's country music. A story about light and dark, and a life lived in between. Travis only promises one thing with his music, truth. The way country music should be,
